RESEARCH

---

① Uncertainty Quantification/Decomposition:

1. WSE calibrates predictive entropy by assessing semantic relevance at both the word (token) and sentence levels, highlighting the weights of keywords and highly consistent sentences in uncertainty quantification [EAAI].

② Conformal Prediction/Statistical Verification:

1. ConU assumes that each sampling set covers at least one admissible response and develops the nonconformity score by correlating it with the uncertainty of reliable semantics within the sampling set of each calibration data point, ensuring user-specified coverage of admissible responses in open-ended scenarios for the first time [EMNLP 2024].
2. TRON develops a conformal score for calibrating sampling size, limiting the average probability that sampling sets fail to cover admissible responses. It then defines the nonconformity score based on semantic frequency to identify high-quality responses, rigorously controlling the miscoverage rate by two user-specified risk levels [ICLR 2025].
3. SConU maintains the integrity of the calibration set and introduces the notion of minimum manageable risk level. It also develops two selective conformal p-values to assess exchangeability via significance tests, providing finite-sample guarantees for the selected test samples in interdisciplinary contexts [ACL 2025].
